Conflict of interest occurs when any of the contributors to the work is in a position that could give rise to a reasonable doubt as to his/her impartiality concerning the research presented in the work in question.

Conflict of interest takes place, in particular, when there are any kinds of personal or financial links of the author to entities interested in proving theses presented in the article.

The following situations are in particular considered as conflicts of interest:

- possession of shares in entities that would accrue any benefit from the presented results;
- providing work or counseling – regardless of the legal form of such activity – to such entities;
- collection of royalties, grants, or other financial or personal benefits from such entities.
- additionally, conflict of interest occurs if any of the above described situations links the author to any of the subsidiaries of entities that can reap direct benefits from theses presented in the work.

To clarify the situation concerning the possibility of conflict of interest, we require authors to provide information on sources of financing of their studies if such financing takes place.

The editors of Reumatologia accept the above declaration.
